Frank and Flora make their way across the rocky wasteland. Flora, who is used to travelling in difficult terrain, moves swiftly. Frank, whose life has been spent in the laboratory, is less confident. However, he struggles on, driven by his overwhelming ambition. More than anything, Frank wants to discover a spider that no other scientist has ever seen.

From a small dark cave, where it has lived for centuries, the Boruncula spider watches and smiles. It too is driven by an overwhelming ambition, which is to add an explorer and a scientist to its collection of human specimens.

This is the moment when the intrepid sister and brother arrive at the spider's lair. Will their quest spell the end of a legend that has mystified generations?

Or will the Boruncula spider be the last spider Frank and Flora ever see?
